

Military Government enactments and orders, whether proclamations, laws, ordinances, notices or orders, will be in English and, usually, also in German. Where German texts are furnished, they are furnished for the convenience of the persons who must obey them, but such persons are, nevertheless, responsible for obedience to an enactment or order as expressed in its official text in English. As was the case in German Military Government in other countries,] enactments and orders in the language of the Military Government are controlling. It will not be an excuse for any person required to comply with an enactment or order of the Military Government to say that he has not understood the official text or that a German text, which may be furnished with it, differed from the official text.
